This activity was exciting and entertaining. I liked it a lot since it helped me interact and get to know a classmate better since, with the virtual modality, interaction has been lost a lot. Personally, this way of receiving classes helps me a lot because I don't have to move around, and I have less chance of contagion. Ángel is a relatively new classmate at school, and he was never in my class section in face-to-face mode, so he helped me talk a little with him and find out about his likes, aspirations, family, and interests. Answering some questions seemed a bit personal to me because I don't know Angel well enough to share this information.

In short, it was a little more entertaining than the rest of the work we've done over the years on values. The only thing that could upset me was that it was a bit long. During this time of bimester end-of-term projects, we have to focus on many things, and although one can allocate one's time, I would recommend doing it in week 4 or 5 so as not to burden ourselves with work at the end two months. As a family and society, we believe it is essential to emphasize values, but I feel it is more important to put them into practice on a day-to-day basis. I liked it when before the pandemic, we could come and share food with the less fortunate; for example, I hope one day we can go back to a bit of normality that we had before.

16. Define tolerance and respect in your own words.

Tolerance is respecting but not necessarily accepting the opinions, customs, beliefs of other people. It is to be respectful even if one does not share the same ideologies. Also, respect is a value that allows the person to recognize, accept, appreciate and value the qualities of others and their rights. In other words, respect is the recognition of one's own value and the rights of individuals and society.
